Higher Education Leadership
Doctoral and Certificate Programs

Regis College
Higher Education Leadership programs at Regis College are designed for scholarly practitioners pursuing professional advancement and for those seeking new career opportunities in this ever-expanding field.

Participants are typically current or aspiring college and university faculty members and administrators, as well as school superintendents and administrators.

EdD in Higher Education Leadership

EdD students at Regis College connect research with practice as they prepare to lead high-performing organizations and inspire student learning. The EdD program is geared toward working professionals in education and other leadership venues. Participants choose among three concentrations:

- Academic Administration
- Teaching and Learning
- Institutional Research, Planning, and Advancement

Post Master’s Certificate Program in Higher Education Leadership

This four-course certificate program is designed for college and university educators, administrators, and advisors with master’s or doctoral degrees who seek greater depth and breadth in their understanding of and expertise in higher education.
The Regis Advantage

Focus, flexibility, and convenience for busy professionals:

- No GRE requirement;
- Complete the doctoral program in three years;
- Capstone project-based program;
- Courses led by active practitioners;
- All courses offered in hybrid format, blending online learning with four weekend days on campus each term;
- Innovative coursework with focus on practical, problem-based methods;
- Technology-rich learning with iPad tablet computers for all students;
- Cohort model to fuel collaboration and professional development;
- Affordable tuition with financial assistance available;
- Suburban campus in Weston, Mass., just 12 miles west of Boston.

About the Program Director

Dr. Ray McCarthy is an associate professor at Regis College. He holds an EdD in education administration from the University of Massachusetts/Amherst, and MS and BS degrees from Central Connecticut State University. His research interests include integrative STEM education, cultural and historical studies, as well as gender and socio-economic equity in regard to all aspects of education. He previously taught at Northeastern University, UMass/Amherst, and Fitchburg State University, and was a public school educator in Massachusetts and Connecticut for many years.
About Regis College

Regis College is a diverse, multifaceted university in greater Boston with 2,000 undergraduate, graduate and doctoral students in the arts, sciences and health professions devoted to engagement, service and advancement in a global community.

Learn more

Contact: Claudia Pouravelis, EdD, Associate Dean, Graduate Affairs
graduatedepartment@regiscollege.edu
Visit us on the web at: regiscollege.edu/edd | 781.768.7058